how to make a line

find a large room you have ambiguous feelings towards if the room is empty: measure the diagonal length of the room from corner to corner divide this length by your height to determine the number of lines to draw make each line as long as you are tall make each line as wide as you want join all the lines together to make one line that connects the room from corner to corner if made correctly the length of your line is a multiple of your height your line can be slightly too long but should not be slightly too short if the room is full: find moments you want to connect draw them together

how to use a line attach each end to synchronized rotating motors and use it as a jump rope use it as a tightrope tie knots on it to record time hang it on the wall like a painting use it as a lasso use it as a noose use it to trace all the things you want but can't afford leave it on the ground to mark where you've been tie it to your house so you can find your way home if your house is light you may use your line to drag it with you tie it to the past glue it on top of a Sol LeWitt wall drawing gather it loosely and use it as a pillow how to fix a line

if this text is printed: on the other side of this sheet of paper is a line as long as I am tall printing broke the line mend it by drawing the fragments together or: make something break it make something else

Lu Zhang
#mkthngshppn